Offer Description

How can we learn from animals how to recover from catastrophic climate events, such as wildfires? How can we include nonhuman species as full participants in our knowledge and governance of disasters? The ABIDE project aims at exploring innovative, cutting edge, ways of answering these questions. Stemming from a ERC Consolidator Grant, from 2023 to 2028 we will explore multispecies approaches to disasters, in particular wildfires, in 3 countries: Australia, Brazil and Portugal. We are looking for highly motivated researchers, team players who are willing to cooperate and contribute to a collective, and with a particular interest in animals and their social lives. Openness to constant learning and theoretical, methodological and empirical challenges are also key, as you will work in a highly interdisciplinary team.

The Institute of Social Sciences of the University of Lisbon (ICS-ULisboa) is calling for applications for 1 (one) Research Grant (BI) for a PhD Student under the research project "ABIDE - Animal Abidings: recovering from disasters in more-than-human communities", funded by the European Research Council [ERC, ABIDE, Grant agreement ID: 101043231], and coordinated by Dr. Verónica Policarpo, from the Institute of Social Sciences of the University of Lisbon, under the following conditions:

Scientific Area: Social Sciences, sub-areas Sociology, Anthropology, Psychology, Human Geography, related areas of Human-Animal Studies; Multispecies Studies, Environmental Studies, Indigenous Studies.

Skills/Qualifications

The grantee will develop in his/her doctoral thesis a proposal for conceptualization and respective empirical observation of the experiences of animals affected by fire, including:

- The multisensory dimensions of these experiences;
- The physical clues that signal post-fire recovery;
- The practices and abilities of the species under study to interact with the territory and other species, including humans, and to recover;
- The meanings and values implied in these practices;
- The biopolitical and ethical implications of these practices for informing multi-species justice.

The grantee will collaborate in ABIDE's research activities, namely by:

- Contributing to the ongoing research of the ABIDE project, including collecting and analyzing data, as well as writing up results, in conjunction with the PI, in order to achieve the project's objectives;
- Collecting, processing and analyzing data from the press, social media and public policies; multi-species ethnography; geographic information, using GIS;
- Preparing reports and other project outputs;
- Preparing activities and events related to the project (seminars, conferences, courses, workshops);
- Writing articles, book chapters and other scientific publications, and collaborating with the team on collective publications;
- Scientific dissemination activities;

g) Scientific secretariat, including meeting minutes, database updates, organization of bibliographies and archive data.

The grantee's duties also include:

- a) Participation in project team meetings;
- b) Participation in the organization of activities within the scope of the project, either internal to the team (e.g. reading groups) or external (e.g. seminars and conferences);
- c) Participation in the activities of the Human-Animal Studies Hub (seminars, reading groups), and ICS-ULisboa.
